And whereas, sumptuary laws have in times past, and under various forms, of even despotic governments, been considered unjust and oppressive, and utterly inconsistent with the end contemplated; be it, therefore,

Recelved, That, adopting the sentigents of the foregoing preamble, and entering our solemn protest arainst the prohibitory liquor laws of this State, we piedge correlves to stand firmly together in resisting, legally and constitutionally, the odious despotism.

Recolved, That the continuance of such a law on our statute bock is a disgrace to the State, and that we shall make its ropeal is he issue at the next fail election.

Recolved, That the hereby piedge correlves not to support nor patronize, either directly or indirectly, any individual or party, or any pertion of the press, which may have advocated the passage, or may insist on the enforcement, of a prohibitory liquor law.

WIGGINS' HOTEL, MONTICELLO, SULLIVAN county, New York —GEURGE WIGGINS, propristor.—We learn that this popular and well known house will be opened on the first of June, instant. Its numerous friends, who for many summers have made it the joyful terminus of their dusty pilerimage from the city, will hardly recognize it, amid the atterations and improvements made by its ent-priving preprietor. The rooms have been caby its enterprising preprietor. The rooms have been en-larged and beau ined, are well ventilated and furnished, and the comfort of the guest has evidently been the first and only object considered. The village of Monticello is justly enicerrated for its heatily air and its unique and de-lightful seenery. The village is easily reached by a ride of about cipht hours from the city; the passenger taking the Eric cars at the foot of Duane street, at 5:30 A. M., fur-nished with through licetts of the agent, Mr. Davis, and leaving the car at Middletown, where a stage will be in readiness to convey him, over a plank road, to Monticelle. Stages run daily East and West from Wiggins' Hotel to the Eric Rails cad.
